

Tip of the Month

Are you seeing probability at the point estimate values of (0+%) or (99+%) for rows in your estimate? In most cases, this is probably not what you intended to model. Here are some reasons you may be seeing these probabilities:

1. You have entered cost High and Low Values for the uncertainty distribution.
While this is technically a valid way to enter uncertainty on a row, keep in mind that ACE assumes cost values are in the base year and units of the session not the row. This can be a big problem if your session is in the $M and your row is in $K. Make sure that the numbers are reasonable.
2. If you see these numbers on a parent row, it could be that all the child rows are skewed in the same direction and there is no correlation between the rows. Add correlation to related child rows to fix this issue.
3. You are using the Probability of Occurrence column and you have specified that the Point Estimate is 0. This is OK because you will see the results of this discrete risk in the BY RISK statistics report. Remember that if you want to create a RISK-allocated report, you must change the specification to view the Expected value or the Calculated value (do this in Session Properties)
